VOL. 4 NUMBER 59

MOKENA, ILLINOIS, AUGUST 17 1923

Price $1.25 per year.

Only Eleven More Days of the "First Period" Big Votes Offer

Candidates in The News-Bulletin's $2874 gift-giving campaign have but 13 more days in which to turn in subscriptions and secure the greatest number of votes for each one.

Interest in the campaign and enthusiasm in the progress each day of the different contestants, is increasing by leaps and bounds.

Every candidate in the race realizes that the Capital Prizes—representing as high as $829 in cash—are practically within their reach, to be claimed by the more energetic candidates as their very own, or forfeited to their harder-working competitors during the next few weeks.

A great deal depends upon the work done by the candidates during these next thirteen VOTE DAYS—the days when each subscription will count many more votes than later on in the campaign.

CONTESTANTS MUST HUSTLE

If a candidate halts now for a moment—if he slack up or let his enthusiasm wane—if he overlook the opportunity to better his chances to win, he is taking desperate chances of losing out on the prize he has set his heart on winning. A candidate who fails to do his or her very best during the remaining thirteen days of the present big vote offer—the biggest and best vote offer of the entire campaign—will meet with disappointment when the campaign comes to an official close in just a few week's time.

LAST CHANCE FOR BIG VOTES

Never again during this campaign will it be possible to secure as many votes on subscriptions and advertising cards as between now and Thursday night, August 30 at 8 o'clock. To hold back subscriptions now, or to depend on "promises" to subscribe later on, simply means that you will have to take LESS votes on each subscription or card. We are putting this up to you fairly and squarely. If you would be declared a winner of one of the big prizes, then you simply cannot afford to pass up the present BIG VOTE OFFER.

THESE NEXT FEW DAYS BIG BIG VOTE DAYS

Now, during the last thirteen days of the BIG VOTE OFFER, you can make the winning race for the "Red Bird" car, if you set your mind on your work and get in and TRY.

Bear in mind that you can pile up the winning votes during these next thirteen days if you try. Votes are all that are needed to win in the campaign, but YOU MUST HAVE PLENTY OF THEM.

HOW TO TAKE THE LEAD

On each 6-year subscription to the News-Bulletin ($7.50) 360,000 regular votes are given and the ($7.50) entitles you to 37,500 Class votes,

Shot Fired In M. W. A. Hall At Tinley Park

Last Friday night about 11 o'clock a shot was fired into the Woodman Hall in the Andres Building at Tinley Park. The bullet shattered a window on the west side of the hall and lodged in the ceiling. The shot and the noise of the breaking glass awoke Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Miller and Mrs. Elizabeth Hardinger and son Norman who occupy apartments directly across from the hall.

The affair was reported to Chief of Police Walter Jurgenson of Tinley Park, but thus far no report has been made as to the outcome of the investigation which was ordered by the authorities. Efforts have been made to keep the story as quiet as possible.

You Must Have Vehicle License In Tinley Park

The village of Tinley Park has a motor vehicle tax ordinance which provides that all auto or truck owners of Tinley Park must take out a special license in addition to the regular state license. This ordinance is now being enforced to the letter. An order has been issued by the village board that the chief of police see that this ordinance is complied with. A number of Tinley Park auto owners refused to heed chief Jurgenson's request that they take out the required license and as a result four summonses were issued and the offenders were summoned before Police Magistrate Clyde Rice Monday night to explain why they refused to obey the ordinance. The ordinance carries a penalty clause of $25 for each violation.

Police Chief Jurgenson arrested an autoist last week for driving on the concrete road in the village limits without a state license. He was taken before Magistrate Rice and fined.

making you a total of 367,500 votes for one 6-year subscription. On two 3-year subscriptions ($7.50), you receive a total of 157,000 votes; on six 1-year subscriptions, a total of 109,000 votes, provided you secure the subscriptions NOW and turn them in during the present BIG VOTE PERIOD.

One glance at the vote standings published in this issue of The News-Bulletin will show you that a few subscriptions, like the above scheduled, for any candidate in the race would make an entirely new leader.

In fact, ENTIRELY NEW CANDIDATES can enter the campaign at this time and by just a little enthusiastic effort, climb to the top of the list and acquire leadership at once for the BIG PRIZES in the campaign. THINK IT OVER—AND ACT.

The News-Bulletin's Great Circulation Campaign less than two weeks old, has stepped right into the forefront of public interest, and the people listed above are the ones responsible for its popularity. Seldom does any weekly newspaper have such a group of representative citizens devoting their time in its behalf, and we are truly proud of these contestants and the success they have already made. Some of the names published last week are missing in this issue, these nominees not caring, for one reason or another, to make the effort to win one of the big prizes; again there are several new candidates, who real possibilities of success for them and are anxious to make the most of their opportunity.

And it is not too late for YOU. Candidates will be welcome in this campaign for sometime to come, and a careful study of the vote schedule will show you how you can jump right to the front with a little serious effort.

LESSON FOR AUGUST 19

STEPHEN, THE MARTYR

LESSON TEXT—Acts 6:1-7:60.
GOLDEN TEXT—"Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation or distress or persecution or famine or nakedness or peril or sword?"—Rom. 8:35.

DEVOTIONAL READING—Rom 8:31-39.

PRIMARY TOPIC—How Stephen Showed His Love for Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Stephen Speaks Boldly for Jesus.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The First Christian Martyr.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Spirit of Stephen in the Modern Church.

1. Stephen, the Deacon (6:1-8).

The early church was threatened with dissension over suspected partiality in the distribution of alms. Up to this time it would seem that the apostles did all the work. In view of such burdens, perhaps some things had been neglected. However, the church proved itself capable of meeting the exigency. A congregational meeting was called; the case placed before the church and the church instructed to select seven spirit-filled men of good reputation to administer the temporalities of the church, giving the apostles the necessary time for prayer and the ministry of God's word. Thus we see how that the Spirit-guided church was able to solve its own problems, and how church government developed. Just as the deacon's office sprang out of this dissension, so new needs called forth new officers. Among the seven deacons, Stephen had first place. While engaged in his duties as deacon, he sprang into the light as an eloquent and powerful preacher. So mighty was his ministry that the number of disciples greatly increased; even many of the priests believed.

II. Stephen Before the Council (6:9-15).

1.—Disputing With Stephen (vv. 9, 10).

Certain foreign speaking Jews took the lead in this controversy. Perhaps the fact that Stephen was a Grecian Jew provoked them to the act. He was more than a match for them while the debate was carried along the lines of reason and Scripture.

2.—Charged With Blasphemy (vv. 11-14).

They trumped up this charge and endeavored to support it by secretly finding and inducing men to perjure themselves in their testimony. Stephen showed in his preaching that God's purpose was progressive and that the policy instituted by Moses should be superseded by the new faith, since this was the culmination of what Moses began. He showed that the old dispensation would be superseded by the new and that the church would come out into the liberty of Christ.

3.—Stephen's Face Transfigured (v. 15).

He was so completely filled with Christ that his face shone as the face of an angel. It was Christ shining through him.

III. Stephen's Defense (7:1-53).

In refuting their charge he showed by the history of God's dealing with the Jews that they had always resisted Him. Therefore their present attitude was because they were unwilling to move forward with the divine purpose. As pointed out by Stiffer four points stand out in his defense:

1. God's dealings with the Jews showed progress. The end was not reached by a single leap but by gradual stages.

2. The temple was not the only holy place. God appeared at different places and at different times.

3. Israel invariably opposed God as He tried to lead them on.

4. He showed his loyalty to Moses by constantly referring to him.

IV. Stephen Stoned (7:54-60).

1.—Looked Steadfastly Into Heaven (v. 55).

This was the secret of his calm. If he had looked about him he might have been afraid.

2. He saw the glory of God. A vision of God's glory can only be seen by those who are loyal unto Him, even unto death.

3. He saw Jesus standing on the right hand of God. The fact that Jesus was standing shows that He is actively interested in the suffering of His faithful witnesses.

4. Cast him out of the city and stoned him.

5. His prayer (v. 60). How like that of Jesus on the cross. Christ so completely filled him that he could thus act.

6. He fell asleep (v. 60). The Christian's death is only a sleep. This sublime scene must have vitally affected Saul who was consenting unto his death.

DODO NOT VICTIM OF MAN

Odd Bird Had No Value as Article of Food—Regarded as Freak of Nature.

Some persons not versed in natural history when they hear reference made to the dodo imagine it to have been some fabled bird of the far-distant past. As a matter of fact, up to about 250 years ago this curious bird was quite plentiful on the island of Mauritius near the African coast, its only known habitat. It derives its name from the Portuguese word "dodo," meaning simpleton.

The dodo was twice as large as an average-sized turkey. Its plumage was ash-colored, its bill dark, and its legs and feet clumsy and yellow. No dodo was ever known to exist after 1681. What caused its extinction is not known.

As the Dutch navigators who landed on the island of Mauritius in the Sixteenth century called this bird "waighvogel," or "nauseous," because it was not palatable with any kind of cooking, it is not likely that it became extinct because it was eagerly sought as a dainty for the table.—American Forestry.

A Bank in Peril.

Every business develops its own peculiar kind of humorous anecdotes.

In one of the banks the other day a girl clerk in the accounting department called a customer and said:

"I just wanted to inform you that your account is overdrawn eight cents."

There was a long pause and then an excited feminine voice inquired: "Gosh! Do you have to have it this morning?"—Youngstown Telegram.

Haw! Haw!

Two farmers met on a country road and pulled up their teams. "Sir," said one, "I've got a mule with distemper. What did you give that one of yours when he had it?"

"Turpentine; giddap."

A week later they met again. "Say, Sir, I gave my mule turpentine and it killed him."

"Killed mine, too; giddap."

Describing It.

"What kind of a place is your neighboring hamlet of Slapdaddle?" inquired a recently arrived guest.

"Well, I'll just tell you," replied the landlord of the tavern at Grudge. "That outfit of tarapins are so far behind that they are just now taking up the roller skating craze for the first time."—Kansas City Star.

Ever stop to think of this?

We are what we eat!

It's a startling fact, yet a simple truth.

This is the reason every one should know that his food is really nourishing—not merely filling.

Grape-Nuts—made from wheat and barley—is one of the few cereal foods that includes the vital mineral salts so necessary for supplying proper nourishment for nerve and bone structure.

In Grape-Nuts, too, is retained the important vitamin-B of the wheat.

No food has greater influence in strengthening the body of a growing child than Grape-Nuts. And remember, children need the very best there is in the way of nourishment.

Grape-Nuts is just as delicious as it is healthful, whether served right from the package as a breakfast cereal with milk or cream, with fresh or stewed fruit, or made into an appetizing recipe. Try the suggestion given below.

GRAPE-NUTS ICE CREAM

Prepare plain flavored ice cream in the usual way. Just before the cream hardens in freezing, add Grape-Nuts as it comes from the package, in the proportion of one-half cup of Grape-Nuts to one quart of ice cream. If you buy ice cream ready-made, add Grape-Nuts in place of nut meats. You'll find the resulting flavor unique.

Where you don't find Grape-Nuts, you won't find people—

LEGENDS TOLD OF HARPIES

In Mythology It Is Related That They Swooped Down and Despoiled the Table of Aeneas.

Harpies were celebrated in many ancient tales as a race of monsters that infested certain shores. They were usually represented as having a woman's head and the upper part of the body and bird's wings, tall, legs and claws, says the Detroit News.

It is related that these fierce monsters flew down upon Aeneas and an expedition from Rome, when the party had landed for rest and refreshment among a group of Grecian islands, and carried away the food from the table before them, and even attacked the men themselves.

The men then armed themselves with swords secretly and waited for the next approach of the harpies, intending to kill them when they came near. But the nimble marauders eluded all their efforts as before. When the expedition left the island the leader of the harpies perched himself upon a rock overlooking the scene and in a human voice loaded Aeneas and his companions with taunts and execrations.

Of Little Value Then.

Two old cronies sat smoking in the library of a club. One was turning the last pages of a novel. He finished the book and put it aside.

"Good story?" inquired his friend. "Fine," replied the other, reaching for a fresh cigar.

He lit up, smoked reflectively for a while, and then said: "Yes, that was a pretty good book. I like these stories where the hero makes a million in the last chapter."

"He is still young, old-timer. When we reach the last chapter a million will do us but little good."

Did German Spies Burn This Elevator?

WASHINGTON.—A demand that the German government produce its official records showing the activities of its spies in the United States during the war is made in a brief filed with the mixed claims commission on behalf of the Kentucky Public Elevator company.

The elevator company is claiming damages of $1,000,000 for the destruction by incendiarism of a wooden elevator with a capacity of 500,000 bushels of grain. It is charged that the elevator was destroyed as a part of the activities of the spies of the German government.

The case is unique in that it is the first time that such a demand has been made upon the German government. The brief, which was filed by Attorneys Louis A. McGowan and C. C. Calhoun, sets forth that this demand is justified by Article 23 of the treaty of Versailles, which provides that: "The German government undertakes to furnish all documents and information of every kind the production of which may be considered necessary to insure the full knowledge of the incriminating acts, the discovery of offenders and the just appreciation of responsibility." Although the United States was not a party to the treaty of Versailles, it is declared that the obligations of Germany under the treaty are pledged to the United States in the treaty of peace approved Oct. 18, 1921, and the agreement of Aug. 10, 1922.

The grain elevator of the Kentucky Public Elevator company was destroyed on Feb. 25, 1917, before the United States entered the war. It is contended that the total destruction of several large grain elevators in various sections of the United States was a part of the plot of German agents to buy up all the grain, or, failing in that, to destroy the available wheat supply in America.

"The scope of the activities of German spies in the United States was very wide," says the brief. "It embraced at least 21 crimes or unfriendly acts committed upon our soil. This work was organized, financed and directed by the official representatives of Germany. As early as July 10, 1914, preliminary instructions were given to 31 men in Berlin who were assigned for duty in the United States for purposes of distributing German propaganda."

Increased Trade With Latin America

WITH exports to Europe declining as industries of the war-stricken countries get back on their feet, department of commerce officials are impressed with the opportunity of American business men to increase their trade with Latin America.

Increased funds available for the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce of the Department of Commerce have given a new opportunity for expanding the promotion work on behalf of American exporters, which is being done in Central and South America.

Exactly twice as much money is to be available during the fiscal year which has just commenced for promoting commerce with South and Central America as the bureau had for this purpose during the fiscal year 1919-20. The new appropriation for this purpose is $200,000. Secretary of Commerce Hoover recommended to the budget bureau an appropriation of $250,000 for this purpose, but the budget director cut the sum to $200,000, which met the approval of congress. This amount, besides being twice as great as the sum available in 1919-20, represents an increase of $29,350 over the appropriation for promoting commerce with South and Central America during the last fiscal year.

Extension of the promotion work in Latin America is one of the pet projects of Dr. Julius Klein, director of the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce, because of his personal experience in that field. Dr. Klein at one time was head of the Latin division of the bureau and also served as a commercial attaché at a South American capital.

When arrangements are completed for the expanded work in Latin America the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce will have men stationed at ten or a dozen strategic points.

Out of the increased funds it has been decided to open a new office at Bogota, Colombia. Carlton Jackson has been assigned as trade commissioner to take charge of the work at that point. Mr. Jackson also will advise the bureau as to the feasibility of opening an office in Venezuela.

Seven regular offices have been maintained in Central and South America during the last year. Commercial attaches are stationed at Havana, Cuba; Mexico City, Mexico; Santiago, Chile; Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, and Buenos Aires, Argentina. Trade commissioners are stationed in Peru and Colombia. These existing offices are to be strengthened by the addition of minor employees.

There is a general improvement in trade prospects for American business men in Latin America, Dr. Klein points out, because of the more favorable export market for Latin American raw materials and better prices obtained.

Reserve Officers Urge Larger Army

INCREASE of the regular peacetime army of 15,000 officers and 150,000 men in order to permit all-year-round instruction of "civilian components of the army of the United States," was urged in a resolution adopted unanimously by the national council of the Reserve Officers' association in Indianapolis. The resolutions were received by Secretary Weeks and sent to the War department budget committee, which is laboring with next year's estimates.

Action of the reserve officers was not disclosed at the time. The declaration relative to peace-time strength of the regular army was made in view of the "indications that an effort will be made at the next session of congress to reduce the present strength" of the regular establishment.

The council speaks for the Association of Reserve Officers which includes a great majority of the 70,000 men of the reserve lists. It asserted that about 5,000 regular officers and 60,000 men were wholly or partially employed in summer training camps work and that "this number is deemed inadequate to give necessary instruction" to the limited personnel now authorized to attend the camps.

The regular army officer corps is now less than the 12,000 total to which it was cut last year and there is little prospect that forthcoming budget figures will ask for any increase, whatever recommendations may be made by army officials otherwise to congress. The reserve officers' organization, however, declared that further reductions in regard to personnel must be made at the expense of the reserve and National Guard training work, as it was "impracticable" to cut further the foreign garrison or "overhead" commissioned staffs.

The resolution also provides for development and maintenance at high efficiency of a plan "which will provide in the event of an emergency" for a selective service system that will insure swift and sure supply of personnel to the armed forces, declared the support of the National Guard to be "essential to the perfection of the national defense" and urge reserve officers to work for "active co-operation and support of the people in support of the National Guard."

For the organized reserves, the national council asked especially that congress provide $4,000,000 next year to "permit the establishment and maintenance of the efficiency of all units"; and indorsed the plan for "unit training" of the reserve as being worked out by the War department.

Uncle Sam Tests

THE most complete composite manufacturing plant in the world, where the manufacturing processes of cement, leather, rubber, paper and textiles are duplicated on an experimental scale, is now being operated by Uncle Sam in the bureau of standards. In this plant also tests of the most practical character are made on the finished product during the investigation of the design, fabrication, uses and properties of structural and miscellaneous materials, such as metal, wood and concrete structural shapes, cement, stone, lime, gypsum, etc.

Included in this equipment is the largest testing machine in the world with a crushing capacity of 10,000,000 pounds. Another has a compression capacity of 2,300,000 pounds and a capacity in tension of one-half this figure.

This work is of great interest and value to manufacturers, especially of the various commodities concerned. Every line of work thus undertaken has its own particular advisory committee, composed of representatives of the manufacturers in the field of industry which it affects.

Among the problems now being considered are the durability of various types of building stone, a study of the theory of reinforced concrete design, a study of the proportioning of concrete, studies of cement control, uses of lime and gypsum products, studies of the constitution of Portland cement, of the simplification of values of fabrics, the simplification of paper sizes, of the power loss in tires through interior friction, and the relative wear of leather produced by tanning.

In another part of the plant is a mill in which similar studies relating to the textile industry are carried out. Here they start with the bale of cotton and end with the finished thread, yarn, cloth or hosiery.

Leather soles and rubber tires are given such wearing tests as furnish comparative measurements of their durability in actual service.

There Is No Condemnation

By REV. JOHN C. PAGE
Teacher of Bible Doctrine, Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.

TEXT—"There is therefore now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus."—Romans 8:1.

Mountain climbing is a difficult task, but the returns for labor expended are rich and satisfying.

When the top of the mountain is reached a scene of such splendor usually opens before the eye that the soul is overwhelmed with the greatness and grandeur of mountain and river and plain, as they unfold themselves in their vast reaches.

The opening words of the eighth chapter of Romans brings us to the top of the mountain of Christian truth from which the believer looks out over the vast stretches of God's grace, and cries out exultantly: "There is now no condemnation."

Condemnation is the result of guilt, of unrighteousness, of a corrupt nature, and the sense of powerlessness to attain one's ideal. If these four limiting perplexing, cumbersome conditions which are attached to all human life in a greater or less degree could be removed, the sense of condemnation would be removed. Now this is precisely what God has done.

First, He has removed our guilt. "I have blotted out as a thick cloud thy transgressions and as a cloud thy sins return unto Me for I have redeemed thee." If the question of method be raised, if we ask how this accomplished, the words of John 1:29 and Hebrews 9:26 will supply the answer: "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." He appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself. In that sacrificial death, He met and settled forever everything involved in our sinning. "He died, the just for the unjust." In view of that death and by virtue of it, the divine proclamation in Acts 13:38 is made: "Be it known unto you therefore, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins: and by Him all that believe are justified from all things." Guilt is removed through the vicarious atonement of the Son of God. To the end of time this truth will be assailed with objections, but as long as the world stands, the outward conscience will turn to it as the one and only appointed "city of refuge."

In the second place, righteousness is imputed to the believer in Christ. With all our self-righteousness, there is a sense of condemnation because of its insufficiency. The soul instinctively feels this. After one has done the best he can, there is this sense of inadequacy and incompleteness, a feeling of shortcoming, and a conviction that our own righteousness is not valid before God even though it stands the scrutiny of man. "All things are naked and open before the eyes of Him with whom we have to do." Motive as well as action is seen by our God. Under such conditions, and standing on one's own merits, it is impossible to say: "There is therefore now no condemnation." But Christ is made unto us righteousness. He not only removes our guilt but reckons over to our account that divine righteousness which by His life and death He wrought out for us. It is as Luther said: "Lord Jesus, I am thy sinner, thou art my righteousness." Imputed righteousness is clearly taught in the Bible. In one chapter, Romans 4, the word "imputed" or "reckoned" is used eleven times in this connection. "Abraham believed God and it was reckoned to Him for righteousness." Abraham is the norm or standard in this matter. A divine righteousness is provided in the gospel and reckoned over to the account of those who believe that gospel. On the basis of this imputed righteousness, in addition to the removal of guilt, one may with increased emphasis affirm: "There is therefore now no condemnation."

In the third place, a new life is imparted. Those to whom a divine righteousness is imputed are made the recipients of the divine life. In other words, when we are justified by Christ, we are also united to Christ in a spiritual, vital and vitalizing union. As the branch is in the vine, so are we in Christ. To be in Christ implies that the life of Christ is in us. The one is the complement of the other.

In the fourth place, power is provided. Condemnation may result from powerlessness as well as from guilt. The "wretched man" of Romans 7:24 cries out for power rather than for cleansing. He longs for deliverance from the dominion of the old nature. His need at this point is fully met, even as it is in every other respect. "The spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." Power is provided, even the power of the Holy Spirit who is "The Spirit of life in Christ Jesus."

In view of this four-fold provision, the soul triumphantly exclaims: "There is therefore now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus," for guilt is removed, righteousness is imputed, life is imparted, and power is provided.

This is indeed a great salvation!

ACRES OF DIAMONDS

Are Right At Your Door If You Will Just "Dig In"

First Capital Prize

"Acres of Diamonds"

Dr. Russell H. Conwell has delivered his lecture, "Acres of Diamonds", more than five thousand times, and in book form it has been widely read. It is a wonderful story with a pointed moral and, delivered under the force of his magnetic personality, leaves a lasting impression on the hearer.

A man in the state of Pennsylvania became infatuated with diamonds and obsessed with a desire for their possession. Mortgaging his farm, he went to South Africa in quest of a diamond mine. Failing in his search, after innumerable hardships, he was forced to work his way home. Upon his arrival he was amazed at receiving an offer of a fabulous amount of money for the mortgaged farm. A thick vein of coal—BLACK DIAMONDS—had been discovered on his farm and that which he had traveled so far to find had all the time been right under his feet, if he had but dug for it.

There are a great many Salesmanship Club members like the chap in Dr. Conwell's lecture. What a great opportunity right here at home for those who "dig in." Unlike the Pennsylvanian, no one is coming to offer them the equivalent of one of the awards with a value running into thousands of dollars, but like him, they can "dig in" and secure one.

Some members have made a good start—but well, let's forget how foolish we have been. With a good start there is still ample opportunity to get back into line for an award if we but determine to do our utmost. With the Big "First Period" Vote Offer still in effect, we can run up a big score of votes before the close of the campaign and resume the place we should have held.

Your "Acre of Diamonds" is right at your door if you will but "dig in."

Great is the opportunity—greatest for those who realize that awards worth thousands of dollars are worth the hard work. Effort will get subscriptions to The News-Bulletin and these subscriptions will get the Big Votes. These votes will win the prizes to be awarded Saturday, September 15.

THE TEST OF ONE'S ABILITY IS IN TRYING

When The News-Bulletin's Salesmanship Club Campaign was inaugurated, quite a lot of folks, attracted by the marvelous value of the awards, entered their nominations, and thought they had made up their minds to secure one of the awards.

Some became faint-hearted, and with the thought that they were not of the "lucky" folks, and not realizing the true nature of the campaign, which is that members will be rewarded strictly in accordance with the work which they do, they gradually desisted in their efforts.

Some found the truth—that the element of luck had nothing at all to do with their success—that hard work was the only way to secure an award, and not fancying strenuous work, they dropped out of the campaign.

The only element of "luck" entering into the News-Bulletin Salesmanship Club is that luck of possession of individual determination—a belief in one's own ability and the willingness to work hard and prove it. If YOU possess that kind of luck you are the one who should at once enter the race and become a member of the News-Bulletin Salesmanship Club Drive.

There are mighty few of us who would not be willing to work strenuously at our usual line of work if we had the inducement held out to us of securing for just a few weeks' extra effort a handsome late model touring car.

Securing subscriptions for The News-Bulletin is a dignified job. You are offering your friends something which, in the very near future, they will purchase in any event. The wonderful improvement in The News-Bulletin has opened the eyes of the public to the fact that this paper is the logical paper to have in the home.

We know there is still time for energetic members to make a start right now and retrieve what they may have lost through their inactivity. NONE OF THE PRIZES HAVE BEEN WON, or anywhere nearly won. Everybody has an opportunity and the opportunity is dependent entirely upon your own individual desire to secure one of these valuable awards.

The standing of the candidates is published in this issue. Look them over—and study what just a few subscriptions will do towards putting your name at the top of the list.

The present salaries of all state governors, including Porto Rico and the Philippines, could be paid for 100 years by the receipts from one crop of corn grown in these 15 counties.

The valuation of dairy products alone in this area, —$23,157,525.00— exceeds in one year the combined postal savings deposits in the states of California, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Kansas and New Jersey.

The richness of the land and other natural resources of this remarkably productive area are back of the securities of this Company.

The Public Service Company furnishes services of a nature so essential to the agricultural, industrial and residential development of this territory, that the prosperity and future growth of Northern Illinois and the Company are largely inter-dependent.

HARDING LAID TO FINAL REST IN HOME TOWN

Marion Funeral Ceremonies for Her Beloved Citizen Are Simple.

IMPOSING CAPITAL SERVICES

Impressive Military and Civilian Procession From White House to Capitol—School Children Strew Flowers—Body Lies in State in Rotunda—Vast Crowds Line Streets and Pay Tribute at Bier.

Marion, O.—Followed by a throng of mourners, the highest in the land and the humble who also had been his friends, the body of Warren G. Harding was taken to the Marion cemetery Friday and placed in the receiving vault.

No imposing ceremony, no military display, no marching of organizations marked the mournful event, because Mrs. Harding wished it so, but as the simple services were being held in the cemetery, in every city, every town and village, every home of the broad land the people of America were paying tribute to the memory of their chief whose life truly was sacrificed in their behalf. Barter and trade, financial business and every other worldly activity that could be suspended ceased for the time, all sports and pastimes were abandoned—the nation mourned.

Great Throngs in Marion.

Here in Marion were gathered a host of prominent persons, from President Coolidge down and including the leading government officials, senators and representatives, governors of the states and delegations from hundreds of cities and organizations. All day Thursday and on Friday morning special trains brought in the throngs, and other thousands of Ohioans came by automobile. So great were the crowds that it was necessary for the state officials to arrange to have the roads for miles around Marion patrolled to prevent accidents.

Thursday morning the funeral train arrived from Washington, and Mr. Harding's body was taken at once to the residence of his father, Dr. George T. Harding. From 2 until 10 p. m. that day and from 9 a. m. until 1 p. m. Friday opportunity was given Ohioans to view the face of their dead friend. Then, quite without pomp, the casket was borne to the cemetery. Following the hearse were the members of the Harding family; next the President of the United States with members of the cabinet and other high officials; then came Mr. Harding's close friends and neighbors, and after them a great concourse of mourners.

Simple Services in Cemetery.

It was Mrs. Harding's wish that all who wished should have a place in the funeral procession. Among those who sadly accepted the invitation were all the employees of the Marion Star who had worked for Mr. Harding for years, and the Ohio newspaper publishers, members of the Associated Ohio Dailies, in which organization Mr. Harding had taken an active part. The Star had suspended publication for the day, and indeed all business activity in Marion ceased throughout Friday. Not as a part of the funeral procession but to preserve order and direct the heavy traffic, 3,000 troopers of the Ohio National Guard were present.

Reaching the cemetery about three o'clock, the cortege proceeded to the receiving vault, and there the brief services were held. Prayers, readings from the Scriptures and the singing of Mr. Harding's favorite hymns—that was all. It was simple and dignified, as was befitting the obsequies of a distinguished citizen of Marion. The services were in charge of Rev. George M. Landis, pastor of Trinity Baptist church, of which Mr. Harding was a member. He was assisted by Rev. Jesse Swank, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church, Mrs. Harding's pastor.

Troops Guard the Casket.

Instead of being interred in the family plot, the body of Mr. Harding was placed in the receiving vault, and there it will remain until a mausoleum has been erected to receive it. As the weeping family and friends moved away from the vault, National Guard soldiers stepped forward and took their place on guard. In a few days they will be replaced by the guard from the regular army, that will stand around the vault for the regulation period of six months. The detail for this purpose will consist of an officer and twenty-five men from Fort Hayes at Columbus.

The Presidential party from Washington, which came on a special train Friday morning, started back for the national capital almost immediately after the conclusion of the ceremonies.

Mrs. Harding, who had borne so well her difficult part, also returned to Washington, on the same train that brought her and her dead. It was announced that she would remain in the White House until she has finished the supervision and removal of the effects of the late President. This probably will take about three weeks.

Services at Capital.

Washington.—Warren G. Harding, twenty-ninth president of the United States of America, most powerful and wealthiest country of the world, received a magnificent tribute Wednesday from official Washington, capital of the nation, preliminary to the final interment of his remains at Marion, O., his home city.

The ceremonies consisted in official transfer in the morning of the body from the White House to the Capitol, where it lay in state until six o'clock in the evening. The American people participated by marching in the funeral procession and by passing by the bier in the rotunda of the Capitol and by lining the funeral route in vast, reverent crowds. Ten thousand school children carpeted with flowers historic Pennsylvania avenue.

The body left the White House, where it had lain during the night, at 10 a. m. Gen. John J. Pershing, general of the United States army and commander of the military escort, led the procession to the Capitol.

Guard of Honor.

Six generals of the army and six admirals of the navy acted as an immediate guard of honor to the caisson bearing the remains.

Seven senators, including President pro tem. Cummins, and seven representatives, including Speaker Gillette of the house, acted with members of the Harding cabinet as honorary pallbearers.

Senator Lodge of Massachusetts, marshal of the civic procession, the clergymen in charge of the services, and the physicians who attended President Harding at his last illness were assigned to places immediately in advance of the caisson.

Chief Justice Taft participated as a former president instead of as head of the Supreme court. Ex-President and Mrs. Wilson were placed behind him.

Procession Makeup.

Behind Mr. Wilson in the procession were placed, successively, ambassadors of foreign governments, associate justices of the Supreme court, foreign ministers and charge d'affaires, senators and officers of the senate, representatives and officers of the house, governors of states and territories and commissioners of the District of Columbia and acting secretaries of the various departments of the federal government.

The following also were included in the official section of the procession:

Circuit Court of Appeals, Court of Claims, Court of Customs Appeals, Court of Appeals and Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, undersecretaries and assistant secretaries of federal departments, assistant postmasters general and assistant attorneys general, United States marshal and United States attorney.

The chairman or senior member of the following groups:

Federal Reserve board, Interstate Commerce commission, Civil Service commission, various mixed commissions dealing with international problems and other agencies of the federal government.

Next in line came patriotic and civic organizations, headed by men who have won the Congressional Medal of Honor for heroic deeds in the service of their country by land or sea. They were followed by army officers, led by Assistant Secretary of the Navy Roosevelt.

Next came officers of the coast guard and public health service, headed by the assistant secretary of the treasury and officers of the coast and geodetic survey, under command of the assistant secretary of commerce.

Delegations not to exceed ten persons, representing the following organizations, also were permitted to participate in the civic procession, among others:

American Legion, World War Veterans, Knights Templar (detachment), Knights of Pythias (detachment), American Red Cross, Sons of the Revolution, Daughters of the American Revolution, Colonial Dames, Sons of the American Revolution, Society of the Cincinnati, Sons of Colonial Wars.

The services in the rotunda of the Capitol were as follows:

Invocation, Dr. A. Freeman, assistant pastor of the Calvary Baptist church, of which Mr. Harding was a member.

Hymn, "Lead, Kindly Light," male quartet of Calvary Baptist church.

Scripture: Twenty-third Psalm, Micah, sixth chapter, eighth verse.

Revelation, twenty-second chapter, first to fifth verses.

Quotations.

Prayer, Dr. James Shera Montgomery, chaplain of the house of representatives.

Hymn, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," male quartet.

Benediction, Dr. Anderson.

The body then lay in state and from four to six the general public was admitted.

At 6 p. m. the casket was taken back to the car in which it had been brought across the continent. Then began the journey to Marion—back to the home town.

The special train bearing the President's body arrived in Washington at 10:25 p. m. Tuesday after a transcontinental journey of 96 hours and 10 minutes. It was 9 hours late—the great crowds in the big cities had almost blocked its way. President Coolidge, cabinet members, members of congress and civilian and military dignitaries were at the depot. "The Marine band played "Nearer My God, to Thee."

Mrs. Harding walked to her car on the arm of Secretary Christian.

The casket, escorted by its guard of honor, was taken on a caisson to the White House, where it arrived at 11:30. It was placed in the East room.

At midnight the White House doors were closed, leaving Mrs. Harding with her dead.

SIX-CENT CUT IN GASOLINE

Standard Oil Company of Indiana Reduces Price in Eleven States.

ASSERTS RATE IS BELOW COST

Statement Issued by the Board of Directors After Protracted Meeting Says Action Is Due to State Distribution.

Chicago, Aug. 14.—The Standard Oil Company of Indiana announced a reduction of 6.6 cents a gallon in the price of gasoline, effective at once in eleven states served by that company. This price cut, the largest in many years, came as a result of a controversy in the oil industry over the best methods of relieving producers, refiners and marketers of the mid-continent field from the burden of excessive supplies and it was directly precipitated by the action of Gov. W. H. McMaster of South Dakota in offering gasoline to the public at 16 cents a gallon.

A statement issued by the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, after a protracted meeting by the board of directors, follows:

"The Standard Oil Company of Indiana announces an immediate reduction in the price of gasoline of 6.6 cents per gallon, applicable throughout the entire territory in which it does business.

"It asserts that the retail prices thus made are far below the cost of production and distribution.

"The governor of the State of South Dakota, buying distress gasoline below cost of production, and charging against the state no adequate cost for distribution, is selling gasoline to the public in the State of South Dakota at 16 cents per gallon.

"The Standard Oil Company of Indiana, operating on its established policy that the customers who purchase its goods should never be compelled to pay a higher price than that maintained and fixed by any competitor, quality and service being duly considered, has met this price."

THEY GET PHILBRICK

SYNOPSIS.—Aline Laverne owns Cypremort, a plantation in the Louisiana bayous. She leaves the management to John Philbrick, an old retainer and faithful, but not a good business man, as Ah Lee, the Manchou, who is trying to help Aline, explains to the mysterious John Solomon. Aline's uncle, David Macarty, and his son, Felix, under pretense of looking after her interests, plot to get control of the plantation. One of their schemes is to dam the bayou and thus dry up her rice fields. Then they try to get rid of Philbrick. Aline suspects the Macartys and consults Jack Fortier, a young lawyer, who takes her case. He finds a big fight on his hands, for the Macartys are all powerful. They try to bribe him off. Then they have him beaten up, but he is rescued by John Solomon. The Macartys drop open hostilities and invite Fortier and Aline to go on their yacht, the Watersprite, to inspect the plantation. Solomon has secured the job of steward. Aline gets a telegram from Philbrick, saying that he is going away for a while and has left the plantation in charge of Captain Wrexham.

CHAPTER V

Upon the following morning, as indicated in the telephone message, Fortier put in a call for Aline Laverne at her hotel. He did this as soon as he reached his office. In his pocket was the telegram from Philbrick. He could feel it burning there.

"Good morning!" he said, when the connection was established. "This is Mr. Fortier. You left word for me to call you up?"

"Yes," answered Aline's voice. It sounded oddly disturbed. "Yes, I—my uncle requested me to ask if you would lunch with us today, at the Louisiana."

Her uncle had requested!

"With pleasure," said Fortier quietly. "What time?"

"About one." Her voice dropped until it was barely audible. "I may call this morning. Good-by."

Fortier intervened as she was about to ring off.

"One moment! Have you heard from Philbrick?"

"No."

"All right. Au revoir!"

Fortier swung from the telephone with blank astonishment and uneasy perplexity in his eyes. He was in a turmoil of emotions.

"What the devil has caused such a change in her, unless she has heard from Philbrick?" he muttered. "She must not have it, either—at least for the present! How did her uncle learn about me? Or rather—why this invitation?"

By degrees his brain cleared. The contents of that astounding telegram were still hammering away at him. He forced himself to forget it temporarily; he must forget it, in order to cope with this new situation.

Had there been an open rupture between Aline and her uncle. It was hard to say. At all events, Macarty had shown Aline that he was aware of her having called in an attorney. This must have happened the previous evening. Fortier sat and figured it out slowly.

"No, there was no rupture," he decided. "Macarty expected that I would be landed in the hospital today, put out of business. So, like the cautious and careful man he is, he took occasion to have a talk with Aline. Perhaps he suggested that she hire a lawyer. Perhaps she admitted having done so already. And Macarty, instead of showing anger, frightened her by suavely commending her good sense and suggesting that she get her attorney to lunch with them today."

"Yes, that's about it! His unexpected attitude probably alarmed her horribly. Now it's a question what will happen today. Macarty will know that he has failed to bribe me, and that his thug failed to do me up. He wants me out of the way, but he's afraid to act on the spur of the moment. He'll wait, and let his precious Felix attend to me, perhaps. Or else he'll spar for time, write Felix, and get advice."

He remembered that telegram again, with a start. Had David Macarty received the same bit of news that this telegram contained? Very possible. This would change Macarty's plans, too; would render him cautious, would make him gain time and leave the game in the hands of Felix Macarty.

Instead of receiving a call from Aline in person, however, Fortier answered his telephone an hour later to find her on the wire.

"I am afraid to come to the office," she said quietly. Her voice was cool as ever, and quite undisturbed now. "I want to tell you to please not come to the Louisiana. I shall have to dispense with your help, Mr. Fortier."

He was staggered by this.

"Why, please?" he queried.

"Because—I'm afraid that it will be dangerous for you. It is not right—"

Fortier broke into a laugh of relief. "Oh! You're not displeased with my work, or disappointed—"

"No, no!" she exclaimed quickly. "It's only that there may be some risk—"

"Nonsense, Miss Laverne!" he interjected. "Please say no more on that head. I shall be at the restaurant without fail. Several things have happened since I saw you, and I am full of information, enthusiasm, and ability to cope with any danger! So don't you dare worry about me. Please tell me just how this invitation came about. Did your uncle suggest that you get a lawyer?"

"Why, how do you know?" she asked in surprise.

"I don't. I guessed."

"Yes, that was it—last night at dinner. I had to tell about having seen you. He was not a bit surprised, and said that I had acted very well indeed."

Fortier chuckled. "Good for Uncle David! Go on."

"Well, something in his manner frightened me, that's all. After I had telephoned you this morning, he was delighted to know that you would lunch with us. I know that he had a telegram from Felix last night, and it made him very happy. Oh, I can't bear to be so suspicious—but at the same time, I was so afraid!"

"Forget it, Miss Laverne," said Fortier quickly. "I think I know what was in that wire he received, and perhaps he'll not be so happy later on. Some things seem to have been happening at Cypremort. I'll tell you about it in good time, but not yet. If we can avoid a showdown with your uncle, we must do it for the present!"

"Very well, Mr. Fortier. Is there anything else you want to know?"

"Has your uncle any reason for wanting to meet me?"

"I think not—except his professed interest in my affairs."

"Very well. I don't think you need hesitate to come around to the office in case of need—or telephone me and I'll come to the hotel. I must do this in any case, as I want to have a talk with you before you leave the city. I want to go down the first of the week, myself."

"But what has happened down there? You mentioned—"

"Oh, nothing vital! I had a wire from Philbrick with some news. Perhaps I'll have a chance to show it to you today."

"Very well. Good-by!"

Fortier hung up the receiver and lighted a cigar, feeling well satisfied with himself. He realized that Aline must see that telegram from Philbrick, after all. Its astonishing contents had better reach her from friendly lips than from those of David Macarty.

He astonished Miss Smith that noon by paying her salary two weeks in advance and telling her that he was going away for a few days. As this was a Saturday, he sent her home at noon, with the understanding that she was to remain in charge of the office during his absence.

Fortier started for the Louisiana, but his way thither was not direct. First he dropped in at police headquarters and indulged in a conversation with the chief of detectives. The latter obtained a dossier containing the information Fortier wished, and retailed it.

"Sure! Here's the whole works, Mr. Fortier. Jean Hennepin, alias Petit Jean, and so on. He broke jail in Latouche while waiting trial for robbery and murder. Probably slipped into the brakes—there's a heap of outlaws in the back bayous, you know. Up the Atchafalaya likewise. It ain't healthy for officers in them parts—all wild country."

"This here Hennepin does a bit of three years, quite a spell back. He's under suspicion of several crimes. He's got a brother, Michael—both Cajuns. The brother is wanted for a shootin' down to Terrebonne. Got any information on them?"

"Not a bit," said Fortier. "The name merely came up in a case on which I was working. I'm much obliged to you."

He went on to his luncheon engagement, thoughtfully enough.

It was surprising to note how this information bore out the remarks of that queer little chap, John Solomon. The latter had conjectured that Petit Jean was not trying to kill Fortier outright. Nor was it likely that Hennepin would have pulled off such a piece of work in the city itself, unless strongly impelled to it.

"Looks like a sweet gang we're up against!" thought Fortier. "That scoundrel's face was devilish. Hope Philbrick knows what he's doing down there! If he's made a mistake in this man Wrexham, then we're in for trouble."

Realizing that he was late, he hurried on to the Louisiana. He found Aline Laverne and her great-uncle already there.

Fortier shook hands with David Macarty, who acknowledged the girl's introduction with hearty warmth and cordiality.

"I'm very, very happy to meet you, Mr. Fortier!" he said. "My niece speaks very highly of you. It gives me great pleasure to believe that she has placed her interests in capable hands."

"I appreciate the implied compliment, Mr. Macarty," and Fortier smiled. "The more so, since your disinterested kindness has been so excellent a guide to her."

"Ah, but I am not a lawyer, my boy! And to avoid misunderstandings, these financial matters must be kept out of family hands. It's better so. Ah, there is our friend, Fordy! I trust, my dear Aline, that we may leave the ordering in his hands?"

Macarty rose to speak with the proprietor. He was soon back.

In the cool gray eyes of Aline, Fortier read amusement at this first exchange of compliments. For his own part, he was quite on his guard, and was resolved to be just as smooth as was David Macarty.

David Macarty was an affable, distinguished-looking, even a handsome man. He appeared younger than his forties, but his "poke" collar and old-fashioned cravat lent him an air of dignity. He was well groomed; his taste appeared excellent.

Any seeking in the man's face for any hint of moral obliquity would have sought in vain. His eyes were frank and humorous, his lips a trifle compressed, lending an air of caution. His heavy-lidded eyes betrayed secrecy—not a bad trait at all. Any movie actor, cast to act this part as that of a villain, would expire in blank despair. There was nothing big about Macarty, but neither was there anything big in his operations or successes.

Fortier, indeed, discovered a definite charm in the man. Had it not been for that bump behind his ear, he might have begun to think his suspicions were false. As it was, he had both the bump and the telegram from Philbrick to hold him to his game.

Aline said very little, but she missed nothing.

Macarty betrayed a lively interest in Fortier's ambitions, and it was inevitable that the impoverished state of Cypremort should be touched upon. Macarty mentioned Philbrick's name, then turned to his niece with a smile.

"You don't mind if I am frank, my dear? It would never do, you know, for me to say things behind your back—but I should really feel it my duty to speak a word here!"

Aline gave him a cool glance.

"Oh! I have already told Mr. Fortier that you and Philbrick don't like each other. We shall be only too glad to have your advice, Uncle David."

"It is most unfortunate," said Macarty, to Fortier, "that I have never liked this overseer. I believe he is thoroughly honest, an extremely fine character in many ways! But at times he drinks to excess, and his ability falters. I would suggest, Mr. Fortier, that you look into his management."

"I intend to do so at once," said Fortier, nodding assent. "Your advice seems admirable, sir, and I thank you warmly for offering it. It seems to me that there may be some method of removing the management from Philbrick, without affronting his integrity."

"Quite so, quite so!" agreed Macarty, cordially. "One hesitates to wound an old servant, who may be inefficient yet very faithful. Philbrick, when under the influence of liquor, is liable to the most extraordinary acts! Only a few days ago, I understand, he shot a negro—killed the poor fellow!"

Fortier looked up with a swift frown.

"Really? That sort of thing is bad, sir! Very bad! It cannot be endured for a moment. Is Philbrick under arrest, then?"

Macarty compressed his lips for an instant, as though impelled to say something which he was determined not to utter. Then he waved his hand, glanced around, and leaned forward. He spoke softly.

"For the sake of my niece, Mr. Fortier, you will understand that we must avoid all notoriety, if possible. Therefore, I undertook to keep the matter quiet. I have a little influence in the parish, and I believe that Philbrick will never be molested by the law. Of course, such actions cannot go on forever."

"I understand," assented Fortier. "Under the circumstances, Mr. Macarty, your kindness speaks volumes for your good heart! Perhaps we can get rid of the man without trouble."

Aline Laverne heard this conversation with a very slight flush in her cheeks, but her gray eyes flashed. Fortier hastened to give her a hint.

"You will pardon these remarks, Miss Laverne? I know your attachment to Philbrick, and I would not cause you any unhappiness. I think your uncle will bear me out, however, in the statement that sentiment is a very bad thing in business."

"Exactly, my boy, exactly!" affirmed Macarty at once. "You have the right idea, sir. Handle things like a gentleman, but with a firm rein."

"We shall see," murmured the girl. The luncheon was nearly over when Macarty suddenly turned to his niece.

"By the way, Aline! You may recall that I had occasion to engage a new steward for the yacht? An odd little man of English birth, although an American citizen?"

The girl looked up. "Yes. You spoke of him."

"He has proved to be an absolute treasure!" said Macarty with enthusiasm. "Upon my word, the man is a genius! It appears that he knows his business thoroughly, and he made a report this morning that astonished me. That scoundrel who disappeared had been grafting regularly—must have stolen a good sum of money from first to last! This man Solomon handed me a check for a hundred dollars, the so-called 'commission' for cabin stores. He actually turned it over to me, as rightfully belonging to me!"

"I suppose you made him a present of it?" asked the girl, a twinkle in her eyes.

"By no means!" stated her uncle. "I made him a present of five dollars. His gratitude was quite touching. I assure you. By the way, Mr. Fortier, when do you go to the island? Aline says that you intend to look over the ground in person."

"I hope to run down next week," said Fortier.

"Then, sir, why not come with us? There is a spare cabin aboard, and we shall get away Monday noon. We would be delighted to have your company, eh, Aline? And it would save you a rather disagreeable trip by train."

"Certainly," said the girl. Her eyes met those of Fortier, and in them he read a sudden warning message that belied her words. It was a message almost of fright. "By all means, Mr. Fortier!"

"Thank you," returned the latter. "I shall be delighted to accept."

A moment later, Macarty was summoned to the telephone. No sooner had he left, than Fortier took a yellow slip of paper from his pocket.

"I think it is best for me to accept this invitation," he said quietly. "Please let me be the judge! And read this message."

Aline Laverne spread out the telegram. It read:

"J. Fortier, New Orleans: They have got me this time. Am leaving plantation in charge of Captain Wrexham. Do not interfere with him. No hurry. Love to Aline."

"J. PHILBRICK."

"Don't worry," said Fortier quickly. "A good deal must have happened down there—more than we can guess. Philbrick is no fool."

"I am not worrying," said Aline. Her gray eyes were serene once more. She was still smiling gravely at Fortier when David Macarty rejoined them.

CHAPTER VI

It was well past noon on Monday when the Watersprite started on her hundred-mile voyage to the Gulf coast. Fortier had heard nothing further from John Philbrick.

In his younger days an enthusiastic amateur yachtsman, David Macarty was nominally captain of this commodious little cruiser. In reality, his two mates did all the handling of the craft. There was a crew of six white men—one of them a quartermaster, Gros Michel by name. A fat, hulking ruffian, this.

On coming aboard with Macarty and Aline, Jack Fortier was introduced to the second officer, Thompson. The latter touched his cap, without apparent recognition, and Fortier chuckled to himself at the sullen features.

Yet, this slight incident worried him. David Macarty had undoubtedly sent Thompson to him. Macarty would now know that he must recognize Thompson, yet was unconcerned. Why so? What game was David Macarty playing so genially and affably?

Of his friend, the steward, Fortier saw nothing at all until the city was behind and Solomon served drinks under the after awning. The man's face was blank, expressionless as ever. He was a perfect servitor.

Early in the afternoon, David Macarty retired to his own tiny state-room for a nap. Before departing, he presented Fortier to the first officer, his actual captain—a fine, brisk seaman named Wright. Fortier liked the man, guessed him to be thoroughly reliable. Wright shook hands and departed to the bridge.

"How do you like the boat?" inquired Aline, when she and Fortier were alone beneath the awning. Fortier met her gaze, and found it sweetly poised as ever, yet somewhat probing and questioning. He puffed at his cigar a moment, then removed it from his lips.

"She seems a fine craft," he responded slowly.

"And—her crew?"

"The crew?"

"The crew?"

"The crew?"

"The crew?"

"The crew?"

"The crew?"

"The crew?"

"The crew?"

"The crew?"

"The crew?"

Fortier looked into the gray eyes again. A smile curved his lips.

"You have an uncanny fashion of reaching to the heart of things, Miss Laverne!" he answered. "Is it intuition?"

"I think so," she said quietly.

"H'm! I believe it is. Well, I'll be frank—I don't like the crew! That chap, Thompson, was in my office last week; he had a big fat bribe to induce me to go to San Francisco on a mythical legal errand. He was inspired to it, of course."

"Oh!" she said. "Then there can be no doubt—"

Fortier made a slight gesture, and she fell silent. Two of the crew, hang-dog rascals, with Gros Michel, the quartermaster, were approaching. The three men set to work refurbishing the brass of the quarter-deck.

"Not a fraction of a doubt," returned Fortier in his usual voice. "By the way, when do we reach your island?"

"Some time tomorrow if all goes well," Aline Laverne eyed the distant river shores as they slipped past. "We should reach Latouche in the morning, and may stop there for mail and supplies. As a rule, uncle leaves the Watersprite there when he is not using her. Latouche is the parish seat, you know."

Fortier nodded.

"By the way," said the girl, after a little silence, "I have with me a number of papers that father had left in his safe-deposit box in the bank in New Orleans. They all seem to be deeds and old papers dealing with the estate. Would it be worth while your looking them over? I thought we might as well have them at hand, in case it becomes necessary to raise any more money by mortgages—"

"Certainly, let me see them!" exclaimed Fortier. "One never knows what may turn up among such things."

"They are in my bag. I'll get them."

Aline rose and went below.

Fortier drew at his cigar, sipping occasionally at the lime concoction which Solomon had provided. The three men of the crew furbished away at the brasses, exchanging occasional remarks among themselves in the back-country patois; all three were Cajuns, Fortier, who spoke the tongue as well as he did English, gleaned that they were discussing certain ladies of Latouche, and dismissed them from his mind.

Presently Aline Laverne returned, putting into his hand a legal envelope stuffed with papers and documents. She sat down with some sewing, and left Fortier to look over the papers undisturbed.

He ran through them rapidly but carefully. Nearly all proved to be documents relating to Cypremort plantation, and some of these went back two hundred years. As he shuffled them, a thin slip of paper fluttered into his lap. Glancing at it, Fortier, to his surprise, perceived that it was a receipt for board and lodging, written in curious English and dated at Port Said in 1905.

"What's this—something valuable?" he said, smiling. He handed the slip of paper to the girl, who glanced at it in surprise. Her eyes softened.

"Oh! No—I suppose father kept that as a memento of his trip," she said. "He was in Syria and northern Egypt about fifteen years ago, on business. He was there for nearly a year, and made a good deal of money. I believe that he always intended to return some day, but of course the war broke up all his plans, and then he died the year after the war. He must have kept this because of its funny English."

Fortier glanced up, to perceive the pudgy figure of the steward before them. Solomon touched his cap apologetically.

"Begin your pardon, sir an' miss," he said. "If so be as you wants tea, I'll ave all ready, ship-shape an' Bristol fashion, whenever you rings."

"Thank you," rejoined Aline. "It's a bit early yet. We'll wait until Mr. Macarty comes."

"Solomon foils an attempt to steal Fortier's papers."

Many a young couple agree to marry and that's the last thing they agree upon.

You may be sure of one thing—that you can't be too sure of anything.

Fortier looked into the gray eyes again. A smile curved his lips.

"You have an uncanny fashion of reaching to the heart of things, Miss Laverne!" he answered. "Is it intuition?"

"I think so," she said quietly.

As he shuffled them, a thin slip of paper fluttered into his lap. Glancing at it, Fortier, to his surprise, perceived that it was a receipt for board and lodging, written in curious English and dated at Port Said in 1905.

"What's this—something valuable?" he said, smiling. He handed the slip of paper to the girl, who glanced at it in surprise. Her eyes softened.

"Oh! No—I suppose father kept that as a memento of his trip," she said. "He was in Syria and northern Egypt about fifteen years ago, on business. He was there for nearly a year, and made a good deal of money. I believe that he always intended to return some day, but of course the war broke up all his plans, and then he died the year after the war. He must have kept this because of its funny English."

Fortier glanced up, to perceive the pudgy figure of the steward before them. Solomon touched his cap apologetically.

"Begin your pardon, sir an' miss," he said. "If so be as you wants tea, I'll ave all ready, ship-shape an' Bristol fashion, whenever you rings."

"Thank you," rejoined Aline. "It's a bit early yet. We'll wait until Mr. Macarty comes."
